Comments:

Surface storage has not solved the water problem in California so far, and it never will. The people of this state must come to terms with this being a state with more people than water. We can no longer live as if we were in Michigan. Conservation, water used carefully, xero-scaping - that is the ~~place~~ ^{place} where we need to start. Phase 1 should NOT include surface storage; it should be focused on better using what we have. There should not be any construction on a peripheral canal that would just facilitate more distraction in a system that has already caused extensive environmental damage and ultimately left us with the same problems the plumbing system was supposed to cure,
